PREPARING BEGONIAS FOR WINTER

When a frost is on the way, some begonias growing outdoors can be examined for insects and disease and then brought indoors. An east window can provide enough light for them to be happy campers. Remember that direct sunlight can burn them and dry heat can cause them to suffer. To create the humidity that they need, place the pots of begonias on pebbles in a shallow tray and add a small amount of water-not enough for the pots to stand in the water. Misting the plants can also provide humidity.

Water under the plant, but the growing medium should be kept between slightly dry, but never soggy. Watch the plants. When the leaves seem to be wilted, then add some rain water to the soil. Do not water the leaves of the plant.

Continue to fertilize with a weak solution some of the begonias such as the semperflorens to keep them blooming. For tuberous begonias purchase tubers and plant them in pots in the spring. These will grow and bloom in the shade.

For other kinds of begonias that you want to grow during the winter, pinch them to start new plants or shape the plant for a show. For cane begonias cut and root in rainwater or add rooting powder and grow a full pot of canes.

The potting mix can be 50% peat moss or a loose mix-not the kind that holds moisture-unless the begonia is a cane type. A time-release fertilizer (Osmocote) can be used two times a year in January and April. Miracle-gro at ¼ strength can be used weekly throughout the year, but always water the begonia before applying a bit of fertilizer.

HORTICULTURE

What a beautiful green landscape we have after the rain finally came to Texas! As we count our blessings, we now also thank Him for giving us moisture to bring the trees back to life. Have you noticed that the crepe myrtles are blooming again with the spring and winter flowers?

All of us have weeds to pull in our garden. The wind also gave us branches and limbs from trees to remove from the begonias. With cooler temperatures we can accomplish so much in a shorter time.

The begonias have really grown in a short time. Some of the cane type begonias must be cut and new plants can make a beginning. Even during the wind gusts some of the begonias had wind damage.

Do not forget Weeding Wednesdays at Zilker Botanical Garden Conservancy. This comes immediately after the AAGC meeting on the second Tuesday.

HOSTING AAGC ON SEPTEMBER 11

During the September 11 Austin Area Garden Council Meeting the Docents and the Austin Area Begonia Society Branch served sandwiches, casserole, cookies of all different kinds such as pumpkin spice, snickerdoodles, brownies, pecan chocolate, and chips and dips to over 40 members and guests.

Vickey Cole decorated the table with begonias over the red table covers and the beautiful tablecloth belonging to Marian Alsup, AAGC president and Docent leader.

Vickey, Nelda Moore, and Lynn Sissney brought food. Doris Hill renewed her membership.

GROWING PLANTS FOR CONVENTION SALE

The Southwest Region Convention is May 1-5, 2019. Since time flies when you are having fun, the Get Together will soon be here. How are your plants these days?

Will you be able to keep them growing during the winter? Will you be able to show plants like those beauties in Louisiana?

Plant Sale set up in hotel room

I know that you answered, "Absolutely!" to all of those questions.

Please continue to try with any job that you take in order for this event to be an educational, successful, fun event for everyone.

RHIZOMATOUS BEGONIAS

'Palomar Prince'

This hybrid has dark green leaves that are deeply cut and double-spireled with flecks of lighter green and accented by golden veins. In winter tall sprays holding pink flowers will enhance the beauty of the begonia.
